Get us out of here get us
away from these people and their fucking eyes

You
You
You can have the
You can have the b
You can have the bo
You can have the bod
You can have the body
You can have the body
You can have the body
You can have the body
You can have the body

hang your body from the rafters and laugh and laugh at you as it chokes

Zines and STEM

Zines are usually associated with the arts, humanities, and activism. But zines can be about anything.

They are great tools for science communication. They're easy and cheap to make and reproduce, they don't require publishing experience, and they're not intimidating to read.

While zines are not normally "peer reviewed", authors usually fact check, cite their sources, and will seek expert feedback before distribution.

Why did we make the library?

The STEM Zine Library aims to celebrate student work, highlight the diverse ways people can communicate in the sciences, and to encourage interdisciplinary experiences.

"The STEM Zine Library is a free zine library centered around STEM (science, technology, engineering, and technology) and STEM-related subjects. We offer plenty of zines for people to take and do with as they please, as well as offering the opportunity for students, alumni, and faculty to submit their own zines to be featured in the library. We aim to celebrate student work, highlight the diverse ways people can communicate in the sciences, and to encourage interdisciplinary experiences."
